Introduction: The concept of recovery is of great importance in mental health as it emphasizes improvements in quality of life and functioning alongside the traditional focus on symptomatic remission. Yet, investigating non-symptomatic recovery in the field of personality disorders has been particularly challenging due to complexities in capturing the occurrence of recovery. Electronic health records (EHRs) provide a robust platform from which episodes of recovery can be detected. However, much of the relevant information may be embedded in free-text clinical notes, requiring the development of appropriate tools to extract these data.

Methods: Using data from one of Europe's largest electronic health records databases [the Clinical Records Interactive Search (CRIS)], we developed and evaluated natural language processing (NLP) models for the identification of occupational and activities of daily living (ADL) recovery among individuals diagnosed with personality disorder.

Results: The models on ADL performed better (precision: 0.80; 95% CI: 0.73–0.84) than those on occupational recovery (precision: 0.62; 95% CI: 0.52–0.72). However, the models performed less acceptably in correctly identifying all those who recovered, generally missing at least 50% of the population of those who had recovered.

Conclusion: It is feasible to develop NLP models for the identification of recovery domains for individuals with a diagnosis of personality disorder. Future research needs to improve the efficiency of pre-processing strategies to handle long clinical documents.

Narratives of Recovery from Mental Illness Mike Watts, Agnes Higgins, 2016-07-15 Narratives of Recovery from Mental Illness presents research that challenges the prevailing view that recovery from mental illness must take place within the boundaries of traditional mental health services While Watts and Higgins accept that medical treatment may be a vital start to some people's recovery they argue that mental health problems can also be resolved through everyday social interactions and through peer and community support Using a narrative approach this book presents detailed recovery stories of 26 people who received various diagnoses of mental illness and were involved in a mutual help group known as GROW Drawing on an in depth analysis of each story chapters offer new understandings of the journey into mental distress and a progressive entrapment through a combination of events feelings thoughts and relationships The book also discusses the process of ongoing personal liberation and healing which assists recovery and suggests that friendship social involvement compassion and nurturing processes of change all play key factors in improved mental well being This book provides an alternative way of looking at mental illness and demonstrates many unexplored avenues and paths to recovery that need to be considered As such it will be of interest to researchers academics and postgraduate students in the fields of psychiatry psychology nursing social work and occupational therapy as well as to service providers policymakers and peer support organisations The narratives of recovery within the book should also be a source of hope to people struggling with mental illness and emotional distress
