Biochemical Differentiation in Insect Glands W. Beermann,2013-06-29 The majority of studies devoted to animal development traditionally start out from questions of morphogenesis Of course visible differentiation as well as the events leading to it should ultimately become describable in molecular terms Nevertheless even simple morphogenetic processes may have a complex biochemical basis which makes it difficult to recognize the key functions involved This difficulty obviously does not exist in the case of glands i e organs and tissues primarily concerned with and characterized by the nature of their products i e one or a few secretory proteins synthesized in huge quantities In these systems when we observe differences between different portions of a gland or when switches of the synthetic activity occur during development there is no question as to what we have to look for we are directly faced with the fact of differential protein synthesis and the problem of its control Insect glands in addition share other significant properties i e the absence of cell division during growth and concomitantly the formation of giant cells with polyploid or polytene nuclei This unique set of peculiarities can be fully exploited only if one compares various representative systems everyone of which when considered by itself might appear too exotic to invite generalization In the present volume the editors have endeavored to bring together contributions covering selected insect glands from various points of view including the developmental molecular genetic and cytogenetic aspects

The Microbial Models of Molecular Biology Rowland H. Davis,2003 The Microbial Models of Molecular Biology covers the history of molecular biology focusing on the microorganisms used how they were chosen what they contributed and how they were displaced by others The research described has prepared molecular biologists to appreciate the variety and complexity of living things in the genomic era
