

]Chapter 1 (The Evolution of Psychology)

Psychology is the scientific study of behavior and the mind as well as conscious experience

Systemic means to be performed according to a set of rules or conditions

Empirical means being capable of being verified or disapproved by observation or experiment

Types of research

- Basic is research seeking knowledge for the sake of knowledge like learning about space because you like space
- Applied is research trying to answer a specific question like learning about the pollution to battle climate change
- Translational is taking things you learn from basic research and applying them to a specific problem like learning about medicine because you want to then figure out a drug.

Early History:

- Philosophers like Plato were asking questions about the mind
- Physiologists like Ali ibn al-'Abbas al-Majusi detailed the anatomy of the brain
- Mind-Body Problem was a problem of how we can study the mind if it is unobservable
 - Dualism
 - Mind and the body are two separate entities that are made of two very fundamentally different forces so like physical and spiritual
 - Rene Descartes argued that the mind is inherently immaterial and therefore unknowable. He stated that our body is controlled by our mind exerting actions that moved through our bodies like tubes
 - Monism
 - Belief that the mind and body are one so going against Dualism
 - Thomas Hobbes stated that mental events were due to physical events
 - Important Idea for psychology that showed the mind can be studied by measuring physical processes.
- British Empiricism
 - Believed that all ideas and knowledge were gained empirically – through the senses
 - Observation is more valid than reason as reason can have potential for error
 - John Locke
 - Philosophy should focus on the capabilities and extent of the human mind. Basically, what can our minds do and how well can they do it
- Wilhelm Wundt
 - First psychology labs came from his students
 - Father of modern psychology
 - Used scientific techniques to study the mind

Structuralism:

- Break it down into elementary components to see what pieces allowed it to do stuff
- Wilhelm Wundt and Edward Titchener studied the mind in terms of the basic elements and used introspection
 - "Look within" to describe one's experiences
 - Focused on sensations which they considered the basic elements of consciousness. Not conducting experiments

Functionalism:

- Look at the function or purpose of the entire big picture
- William James and James Rowland Angell focused on investigating the function or purpose of consciousness like "what does the mind do"
 - Influenced by Darwin's theory of evolution
 - Stressed important of adaptation in helping organisms survive and reproduce
